Following are comments on Support Bulletin article on home leave:

enunciates Question 15: I don't believe such a policy has ever been ~~enunciates~~ by the Agency and I am inclined to think we would take legal objection to it. At least the travel part of our home leave authority probably grants a right in the employee. Considering this and the fact that there are a variety of reasons in the interest of the Agency for calling a man off of leave there probably should be some provision for permitting a split leave under certain well-defined circumstances. may do about this Question 19: A sentence should be added indicating that dependents may travel at their own expense in reasonable anticipation of the employee's travel order and then may be reimbursed for the travel upon the issuance of the order.

Question 20: Here again there are circumstances where the traveler might be forced to abandon his travel "at the convenience of the Government" or for some reason beyond his control and acceptable to the Agency. We use such a provision for interrupted travel (that is, expenses caused by the interruption) to cover severe illness, strikes, civil disturbances, train wrecks, etc.
